The Nike Air Ghost Racer has already re-entitled to a host of compelling color combinations this year and has once again appeared this time with a wild selection of added details. The run-turned lifestyle silhouette keeps its base layer to a minimum opting for a unique white shade treated against its leather/mesh build. But the swarm of different accents certainly steal the show here, as double stacked Swooshes are beaten on the lateral sides, camo patterns paint tongues, and cheetah prints infuse the middle of the foot. In addition, a trio of Swoosh patches stack up on top of their heels, and the lateral/medial panels are adorned with embroidered hits from Zoom Air, set in digital font to help these Ghost Racers earn their Copy and Paste moniker. Released back in '99, an American long distance runner who went by the name Mark Nenow inspired the vintage trainer. Mark was a humble, down-to-earth athlete who didn't enjoy than to lace lace and train late at night. This was not necessarily because of his competitors; that's just what Mark loved to do. Aply nicknamed 'Ghost Racer' (due to him rarely seen), it wasn't long until Mark caught the eye of sportswear giant Nike, which hired the services of the Minnesotan maverick to help design a runner they were working on. Yep, you guessed it, this runner was called Ghost Racer. Returning to size? This season we have reworked Ghost Racer in a new 'Copy Paste' makeup. At the top, the couple's 'Sail' leather and nubuck base serve as the perfect canvas for the playful overlays & branded products. From the side walls, the duo 'University Gold' and 'Photo Blue' Swooshes provide a clear contrast from the muted base, while 'ZOOM AIR' print sits under the pair's transparent midfoot panels. Adding a hidden touch, a camo print sits on the tongue. Moving in on the heel now, and three colorful suede and snakeskin Swoosh overlays work its way from the tip to the midsole in an almost traffic light-like design. Under foot, the trainer's Zoom Air midsole cushions your entire step and has a wild cheetah print design, while a rubber outsole keeps you safe and stable on smooth surfaces.
